Christopher Fuhrmann is Associate Professor of History and Classical Studies adviser at UNT. He holds a BA and MA in Classics from the University of Kentucky, and an MA and PhD in History from the University of North Carolina. He teaches a variety of courses on ancient history and religion, including graduate courses on ancient military history. In 2012 Oxford University Press published his Policing the Roman Empire: Soldiers, Administration, and Public Order, which focuses heavily on the role of detached-service soldiers. He has also published on Greek politics in the Roman Empire, soldiers’ involvement in the imperial persecutions of Christians, and Roman law. His current research projects include an analysis of the Jewish Diaspora Revolt under Trajan (AD 116-117). He also retains a longstanding interest in the intersection of religion, war, and historiography.
