

Andrew Huebner

Andrew Huebner currently is an PhD student and Teaching Assistant at the University of North Texas in Denton, Texas. Andrew earned his Bachelor's of Arts in History (2016) with a minor in English from Texas A&M University in College Station, Texas. He earned his Master's in History (2019) at the University of North Texas. His thesis, titled "Famine Fighters: American Veterans, the American Relief Administration, and the 1921 Russian Famine", was supervised by Dr. Olga Velikanova (chair), Dr. Geoffrey Wawro, and Dr. Graham Cox.

Andrew's current research interests revolve around American relief operations during the post-First World War Reconstruction period (1918-1921) with a specific focus on the Baltic states. His studies examine the role of U.S. military personnel in influencing humanitarian operations, foreign policy, and the emergence of new nation-states. Andrew's research interests also include Russia in the First and Second World Wars and the ancient Roman Republic.

Andrew has published with the Army University Press (AUP) as a part of their case study book set on Large Scale Combat Operations (LSCO). Additionally, he has presented at several conferences including a special focus conference hosted by the Centre for War Studies at the University College of Dublin. He is a member of the Phi Alpha Theta history honor society, the Society of Military History, and the American Historical Association.

Andrew is originally from Brazoria, Texas. His favorite hobbies include archaeology, drawing, writing, and playing board games. He is a board member of the Texas Military Historical Society and also regularly volunteers at the Museum of the American G.I. in College Station, Texas.
