

Nathaniel Jarrett received a Bachelor of Arts in History as well as a Bachelor of Arts in Mathematics with a minor in Computer Science from High Point University in 2011. Pursuing his passion for history, Nathaniel moved to Texas to study the French Revolution and Napoleonic Era with Dr. Michael V. Leggiere. At UNT, he earned his MA in History in 2013 and completed his Ph.D. in 2017.

Nathaniel's Dissertation, titled "Collective Security and Coalition: British Grand Strategy, 1783-1797," examines the intent and execution of the foreign policy of British prime minister William Pitt the Younger from the end of the American War of Independence to the end of the War of the First Coalition against Revolutionary France. It demonstrates that Pitt's ambition of creating a broad collective security system encompassing all of Europe governed Britain's foreign policy in peace and its strategy in war. Nathaniel has also published an article titled "False Start: Britain and Coalition Warfare in 1794" in War in History. In addition to British military and diplomatic history, Nathaniel is interested in the Holy Roman Empire and the Middle East in the Early Modern Era, as well as the history of International Relations Theory.

Nathaniel currently lives in Texas with his wife, Kambria, and their son, James. Beyond academic pursuits and family activities, Nathaniel indulges in a wide variety of digital and tabletop strategy games.
