

Tiffany Smith Chamberlain

Tiffany Smith Chamberlain earned her Bachelor of Science (2010) and Master of Art (2013) degrees in history from Texas Woman's University. Her main field of study is 20th century American warfare with a special emphasis on the juxtaposition of modern warfare and society. Smith's graduate thesis examined the role of 4-F men (military rejection) in the Second World War and the social stigma associated with military rejection in an era of intense patriotism. Her doctoral research focused on early military discharge (4-F veterans) in the Second World War for physical, psychological, or moral reasons and the effects of early military separation. Tiffany defended her dissertation and graduated in Spring 2019. Her dissertation, "Uncle Sam Does Not Want You: Military Rejection and Discharge during the World Wars," written under the direction of Dr. Wawro, won the Outstanding Doctoral Dissertation in War and Society award. She currently is an Associate Professor of History at Tarrant County College and an adjunct at Texas Woman's University.
