

Intoxicated Resistance:

Alcohol, Slavery, and Rebellion in the Colonial British Atlantic

Sponsored by: Department of History

"Did slaves drink? Join us to learn more about the ways slaves used rum to retain cultural practices, form new communities, and rebel against the institution that kept them in bondage in the eighteenth-century British Atlantic."

Kristen D. Burton received her Ph.D. from UT Arlington, and specializes in the history of alcohol production and consumption throughout the early modern British Atlantic. She is currently a Research Fellow at the Waggoner Center for Civic Engagement and Public Policy and a Visiting Assistant Professor of History at Louisiana Tech University.

A green light to greatness.®

DEPARTMENT OF HISTORY
College of Arts & Sciences

